GREEN TIP

As nights draw in and temperatures drop, this may be a good time to be thinking about how you might heat your home in the future. Gas and oil are increasingly unsatisfactory options as both emit greenhouse gases. Wood burning stoves, while carbon neutral in one respect, may involve a lot of carbon in transporting the logs to your home. They also pollute the air with particulates that are not good for your health.

Heat pumps may be an answer (air or ground sourced). They are not a cheap option, but the long winter months may be a good time to investigate this method of heating. A battery is also worth looking in to, particularly if you have solar panels.
